

Yurovska V. Imperative method of administrative law: some views on further research prospects

The article is devoted to the analysis of the imperative method of administrative law. The author ascertained that the imperative method is, undoubtedly, the main method of legal regulation, which, along with instructions and prohibitions, applies such specific methods as subordination and coordination. However, reformatting the subject of administrative law and including in its range those legal relations that are built on the basis of the “mutual right of demand,” those that are characterized by equality (although sometimes relative) of their participants, is the consequence of the inevitable change of emphasis in the legal regulation of such relations, the application of other, more balanced means of legal impact.

Key words: administrative law, administrative and legal regulation, imperative, imperative method.
